YES WITH THE EUROPEAN DREAM

Say 'yes' to the draft Constitutional Treaty
For a Metamorphosis of the Union

The Europe being built is the fruit of a "European Dream"; in this respect, civil society should be proud of the role it has played for the past fifty years to help the European Dream and the EU Treaties evolve. Today's Europe is a source of pride and renewed enthusiasm for us. It is envied by the other regions of the world. It marks a new stage in the history of mankind, since it is the Europe of peace-building between countries that used to repeatedly take up arms against each other, a Europe promoting the collective well-being of its peoples, a Europe of values in a society that has succeeded in establishing connections between local and global levels and between the past, the present and the future, fostering unity in diversity. US author Jeremy Rifkin has developed the idea that the European Dream is far better suited than the American Dream to this new stage in the human journey, a stage that "promises to have mankind adopt a new global consciousness in keeping with an increasingly interconnected and globalized society. The European dream is based on inclusivity, cultural diversity, quality of life, sustainable development, social rights and universal human rights".

The draft Constitutional Treaty provides the means to further transform the European project at the service of the peoples. Until now, some only regarded the Union as a large free trade area. With the Constitutional Treaty, the cornerstone of the EU will no longer be the market but the fundamental rights that have become the "heart and soul" of the Treaty. With the draft Constitutional Treaty, we shall have increased means to turn the project of a super-state at the service of the market (which is how some people view the Union) into that of a Network Europe with multi-level partnerships that are no longer established between the State and the Market but between the three elements of a triangle "Government-Market-Civil Society at the service" of the Common Good.

If American citizens were asked to ratify the draft Constitutional Treaty today, a majority of them would vote against the Treaty, particularly because the Charter of Fundamental Rights goes too far on certain points, such as the abolition of the death penalty. They would also vote against the draft Treaty since a social market economy, sustainable development, free and fair trade and the eradication of poverty are substituted for free market. This is precisely because the draft Constitutional Treaty enables Europe to become the indisputable leader in the area of human rights that we are calling for a 'yes' vote on the Treaty.

The inclusion of a section on participatory democracy is another new significant lever, as it will help develop a complementary engine in the 'Europe' rocket: the participatory route. With the integration of the Charter of Fundamental Rights as a cornerstone of the Treaty and the new objectives of the Union described above, European policies will have to change. The very text of the draft Treaty can therefore be the starting point for a real "metamorphosis" of Europe – to take up Edgar Morin's phrase – and give it a new face. This is another reason why we are calling for a 'yes' vote on the draft Constitutional Treaty as a new, important stage which will enable Europe to build a new social contract and contribute to human security and world peace.

addressed to the States bordering the Mediterranean Basin and the European Council*

With the European Constitution, the cornerstone of the EU will no longer be the single market but Fundamental Rights. The next stage in the metamorphosis of the Union lies in making a success of its enlargement and its partnerships within and with the Mediterranean Basin.

The Permanent Forum of Civil Society proposes raising the status of the Euro-Mediterranean Partnership and turning it into a "Euro-Mediterranean Alliance" focused on fundamental human rights and human security.

1. The challenge of the future enlargement of the Union to the south – Turkey and Croatia today, Serbia Montenegro, Bosnia Herzegovina, FYROM-Macedonia, Kosovo and Albania in the future – cannot be dissociated from the challenge posed by the Euro-Mediterranean Partnership. The review of the Euro-Mediterranean Partnership in 2005 is an especially favourable opportunity for trying to establish a new consensus that includes the issue of the Union's borders and its neighbouring relations to the south.

2. The context has been deeply disrupted by the events that have occurred since 11 September 2001. The best "European" response to the new challenges is to give a new framework to the Euro-Mediterranean Partnership. "It is up to us to turn the westernization of the world and its disenchanting and uprooting machine into a more humane world" (1) by working on the construction of a common political project, source of dignity, pride and peace, rooted in our common history and tackling today's challenges in order to "reenchant" tomorrow's world.
3. The Euro-Mediterranean area will thus become a pilot region of the world in terms of implementation of fundamental rights and the concept of human security as defined by the United Nations Ad Hoc Commission: "Human security means protecting vital freedoms – those fundamental freedoms that should characterize every human life. It means protecting people from critical and pervasive threats and situations. It means developing policies in the social, economic, military, cultural and environmental management fields which altogether constitute the building blocks of survival, dignity and minimum livelihood" (2).
4. The Forum proposes that the States bordering the Mediterranean Basin and the European Council together with civil society and business should reflect on the essential components of this Alliance, such as:
  - a "Charter for a Euro-Mediterranean Civilisation" (including a section on Fundamental Rights);
  - an "Annual Council meeting of Heads of State and Governments";
  - a "Senate" for human security and fundamental rights (for example, two elected members per riparian State);
  - a "Court of Justice" to enable any citizen within the Alliance to claim protection of one's Rights as a Human Being (to be defined as a result of dialogue with the Strasbourg and Luxembourg Courts of Justice);
  - a "Tripartite Council of enhanced partnerships"(Government, Business, Civil Society) with the mission of establishing partnerships for free and fair trade, eradicating poverty (in accordance with the draft Constitutional Treaty) and fulfilling the Millennium Objectives;
  - a Sustainable, Fair, Free Trade Area;
  - Action plans resulting from the Barcelona process;
  - "headquarters" or a "capital city" in the Mediterranean Basin

A human security-now

The report's call for human security is a response to the challenges in today's world. Policies and institutions must respond to these insecurities in stronger and more integrated ways. The state continues to have the primary responsibility for security. But as security challenges become more complex and various new actors attempt to play a role, we need a shift in paradigm. The focus must broaden from the state to the security of people - to human security.

Human security means protecting vital freedoms. It means protecting people from critical and pervasive threats and situations, building on their strengths and aspirations. It also means creating systems that give people the building blocks of survival, dignity and livelihood. Human security connects different types of freedoms - freedom from want, freedom from fear and freedom to take action on one's own behalf. To do this, it offers two general strategies: protection and empowerment. Protection shields people from dangers. It requires concerted effort to develop norms, processes and institutions that systematically address insecurities. Empowerment enables people to develop their potential and become full participants in decision-making. Protection and empowerment are mutually reinforcing, and both are required in most situations.

Human security complements state security, furthers human development and enhances human rights. It complements state security by being people-centered and addressing insecurities that have not been considered as state security threats. By looking at "downside risks", it broadens the human development focus beyond "growth with equity". Respecting human rights are at the core of protecting human security.

Promoting democratic principles is a step toward attaining human security and development. It enables people to participate in governance and make their voices heard. This requires building strong institutions, establishing the rule of law and empowering people.

Ways to advance the security of people

Human security seeks to strengthen and bring together efforts to address issues such as conflict and deprivation. Attempts are being made, for example, to realize the United Nations' Millennium Declaration and the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). Achieving human security requires building on and going beyond the MDGs, by undertaking efforts to address the full range of critical and pervasive threats facing people.

Protecting people in violent conflict: Civilians are the main casualties in conflicts. Both norms and mechanisms to protect civilians should be strengthened. This requires comprehensive and integrated strategies, linking political, military, humanitarian and development aspects. The Commission proposes placing human security formally on the agenda of security organizations at all levels. There are critical gaps in how human rights are upheld, in respect for citizenship and humanitarian law. These gaps need to be closed as well as attention given to ending the impunity of perpetrators of human rights violations. Community-based strategies to promote coexistence and trust among people will support these efforts. Equally urgent is meeting the life-saving needs of people through humanitarian assistance. Special attention should be given to protecting women, children, the elderly and other vulnerable groups. Disarming people and fighting crime through preventing the proliferation of weapons and illegal trade in resources and people has to be a priority.

Protecting and empowering people on the move: For the majority of people, migration is an opportunity to improve their livelihood. For others, migrating is the only option to protect themselves, such as those forced to flee because of conflicts or serious human rights violations. Others may also be forced to leave their homes to escape chronic deprivations or sudden downturns. Today, there is no agreed international framework to provide protection or to regulate migration, except for refugees. The feasibility of an international migration framework should be explored, through establishing the basis of high-level and broad-based discussions and dialogues on the need to strike a careful balance between the security and development needs of countries, and the human security of people on the move. Equally important is to ensure the protection of refugees and internally displaced persons, and identify ways to end their plight.

Protecting and empowering people in post-conflict situations: Cease-fire agreements and peace settlements may mark the end of conflict, but not necessarily the advent of peace and human security. The responsibility to protect people in conflict should be complemented by a responsibility to rebuild. A new framework and a funding strategy are necessary to rebuild conflict-torn states - one that focuses on the protection and empowerment of people. Such a human security framework emphasizes the linkages among the many issues affecting people, such as ensuring people's safety through strengthening civilian police and demobilizing combatants; meeting immediate needs of displaced people; launching reconstruction and development; promoting reconciliation and coexistence; and advancing effective governance. To be successful, it requires setting up unified leadership for all actors close to the delivery point of human security. To implement such a framework, a new fundraising strategy should be designed for post-conflict situations, at field level, to ensure coherence in the planning, budgeting and implementation of human security related activities.

Economic insecurity - the power to choose among opportunities: Extreme poverty remains pervasive. The proper functioning of markets as well as development of non market institutions are key to poverty eradication. Efficient and equitable trade arrangements, economic growth reaching the extreme poor and a fair distribution of benefits are essential. Together with addressing chronic poverty, human security focuses on sudden economic downturns, natural disasters and the social impacts of crises. To make people secure when crisis hits or to enable them to move out of poverty, we need social arrangements to meet their basic needs and ensure an economic and social minimum. Three-quarters of the world's people are not protected by social security or do not have secure work. Efforts to ensure sustainable livelihoods and work based security for all need to be strengthened. Access to land, credit, education, and housing, especially for poor women, is critical. An equitable distribution of resources is key to livelihood security and can enhance people's own capacity and ingenuity. Social protection measures and safety nets can advance a social and economic minimum. States, supported by the international system, need to establish early warning and prevention measures for natural disasters and economic or financial crises.

Health for human security: Despite the progress in healthcare, 22 million people died of preventable diseases in 2001. HIV/AIDS will soon become the greatest health catastrophe. In their urgency, depth and impact, global infectious diseases, poverty-related threats and health deprivations arising from violence are particularly significant. All health actors should promote health services as public goods. It is essential to mobilize social action and invest in supportive social arrangements, including the access to information, to remove the root causes of ill-health, to provide early warning systems and to mitigate health impacts once a crisis occurs. Providing access to life-saving drugs is critical for those in developing countries. An equitable intellectual property rights regime needs to be developed to balance incentives for research and development with ensuring people's access to affordable life-saving drugs. The international community must also form a global network of partnerships for health, promoting, for example, a global surveillance and control system for infectious diseases.

Knowledge, skills and values - for human security: Basic education and public information that provide knowledge, life skills and respect for diversity are particularly important for human security. The Commission urges the international community to actively help the achievement of universal primary education, with a particular emphasis on girls' education. Schools should not create physical insecurities, but protect students from violence including sexual violence. Education should foster respect for diversity and promote the multiplicity of our identities by employing a balanced curriculum and method of instruction. Public media are important as they can provide information on life skills and political issues, and give people voice in public debate. Not only should education and the media provide information and skills that will improve work opportunities and family health, but they should also enable people to actively exercise their rights and fulfill their responsibility.

Based on the foregoing the Commission has arrived at policy conclusions in the following areas.

1. Protecting people in violent conflict
2. Protecting people from the proliferation of arms
3. Supporting the security of people on the move
4. Establishing human security transition funds for post-conflict situations
5. Encouraging fair trade and markets to benefit the extreme poor
6. Working to provide minimum living standards everywhere
7. According higher priority to ensuring universal access to basic health care
8. Developing an efficient and equitable global system for patent rights
9. Empowering all people with universal basic education
10. Clarifying the need for a global human identity while respecting the freedom of individuals to have diverse identities and affiliations.
